Volcano tourism – a thrill for real adventurers

Travelling is something most people like. Some of them want to stay in a five-star hotel and to get some rest on the beach. Maybe, to go for some walk in the evening. Others think this is boring, and they like a little bit more adventure on their vacation, such as hiking, sailing, excursions, etc.

We also have a third group of people, the one that prefers a dash of danger. They made popular some unusual types of tourism, including Volcano tourism.

Volcano tourism became very popular in 2010, after the eruption of Eyjafjallajökull, the volcano in Island. The volcanic eruption bought economic prosperity in this area, thanks to tempting offers from tourist agencies.

Since then adventures tourists are even more interest to observe volcanic eruptions from close range. Of course, this is not the usual sort of tourism, and safety precautions are necessary.

If you would like to experience volcano tourism, pay attention to these tips.

Modern science is making sure that we know when and where the volcanic explosion is going to happen. So these pieces of information are leaving space for tourist organizations to plan their program for visitors. Every tourist must be aware of potential danger, the possibility of evacuation, safety measures and risk factors.

Volcanic eruptions are not like shopping in Milano or visiting Louvre. You must come prepared, especially when it comes to clothes and shoes, which has to be comfortable. Bring only necessary items with you, so your luggage doesn't have to be too big.

In every tourist group, there are travellers, which sometimes break the rules. They are late, or they don't listen to the advice of their guides. You have to be clear, that, this time, if you don't pay attention to the rules, that touristic guide is telling you, you are risking your life and life of the others. So this is not one of those trips, where you can do whatever you like.

How can adrenalin junkies have extra fun in volcano tourism?

Some tourists just like to observe volcanic explosions from the safe distance. Others want to experience the real thrill.

Depends on the volcanic ground, there are a few volcanic "sports" for adrenalin junkies, such as skiing and sliding. Usually, tourist goes to a few minutes or a few hours on a hiking tour. When they climb up on particular heigh, they get dressed in special suits, put some surgical masks and protected googles, and slide down.

If you think this is real adrenalin, you must know that there are more extreme sports, like abseiling in the volcano's hole. After some hiking and climbing to the mountain, you can descend a few feet inside the volcano, with the rope. Yes, it is dangerous, it is hot, and not the mention gases from lava, but this is an authentic life experience.

We don't have to mention that for this sort of excursion, you have to be physically and mentally prepared. Also, this sort of adventure is not for cardiac patients and juveniles.

Famous volcanic tourism destination.

Except for Eyjafjallajökull, there are few other tempting destinations, when it comes to volcanic tourism.

New Zeland is pretty famous. There are several volcanos. One of the most famous is White Island, Ruapehu, Havre Seamount, Monowai Seamount, Raoul Island, etc.

Cerro Negro in Nicaragua is also very popular, and Ambrym island in South Pacific as well. Countries like Turkey, Italy, Spain, France, Taiwan and others are famous for their volcanic tourism.
